The almost 6,000 entries have been whittled down to 100, and the final shortlist of 10 has been announced. The winner, Waltz with Bashir, is a film by Israeli director Amos Oz, set in Lebanon. How has it emerged from the crowded prize list by its own merits, as opposed to high-profile backing from the likes of the BBC, which is sponsoring it in Britain? Oz's story is made up of three parts, each in a way, usually at home when the subject is contemporary.

It is the story of his experiences in "The Golani" unit, the elite part of the Israeli army in Lebanon, including the massacre in Sabra and Shatila. The first section is a real-life documentary, the second is a reconstruction of the events with a mix of fact and fiction, and the third is a more overtly fictionalised section. It is the latter that is most likely to be praised.
